Kremlin Announces New Offensive Actions by Red
Troops in Field

(By International News Service)

MOSCOW, June 27.—The parachute army which Germany borrowed from Soviet designs and used to crushing advantage elsewhere in Europe entered the campaign against Russia today. Soviet military authorities claimed complete success in dealing with the air-borne troops, citing numerous instances where parachutists were killed or captured before being able to carry out their missions.

At the same time, the Kremlin announced new offensive actions by Red army troops in the field. In the Pruth river sector, a scouting force of Russian troops crossed the boundary line into German territory, capturing ten prisoners, a sub-machine gun and eight rifles.

In its latest communique, the Russian high command claimed victories in tank battles which were described as clashes between "land battleships." Fragmentary information released during the day placed emphasis upon activity of German parachute troops, indicating that the Reich was reverting to this type of warfare in an effort to disorganize the Soviet lines and hurl spearheads deep into Russian soil.

At one point, according to the official Russian news agency Tass, German parachutists disguised in Red army uniforms were landed.

PREDICT SHORTAGES OF MANY ARTICLES

Americans Are Going To Do
Without $2,000,000,000
Worth of Goods

MORE SHORTAGES IN '42

(Note: This is the last of four articles on the effect the National Defense Program is having on the average man in the street.)

By Jack Vincent

(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)

WASHINGTON, June 27.—(INS)—Measured in dollars and cents, Americans are going to have to do without $2,000,000,000 worth of goods and services this year that they might have been able to buy in normal times.

And, in 1942, the need to divert much of the U. S. production capacity to munitions will mean that there will be between $8,000,000,000 and $9,000,000,000 worth of shortages of goods and services for civilians.

Those are the best estimates available at OPM. If the size of the defense program is boosted (a second program is now being drafted) the shortages may become more acute.

This means, in turn, that strict price controls are in the offing. OPM officials also are considering the possibility of asking Congress for legislation to curb installment buying.

Officials of the OPM's Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply (OPACS) are greatly disturbed by estimates of the Credit Research Unit of the Department of Commerce pointing toward a 42.7 per cent increase in the financing of new automobiles this year, as compared to 1940. They say this gives evidence of a very noticeable increase in the expansion of the installment business in all lines, as well as motor cars.

For 1940, it was estimated that about $5,000,000,000, or about 12 per cent of all retail sales, were credit-financed. Between 50 and 60 per cent of automobile sales were installment sales; about 50 per cent of all household appliances; about 40 per cent of all furniture sales; 20 per cent for jewelry stores; and about 10 per cent for department stores.

N. H. Engle, adviser on distribution at OPACS, says:

"What have these facts to do with defense or what concern are they of the defense administration? Just this—you will note that the greatest use

THE GREAT GAME OF POLITICS

By FRANK R. KENT
(Distributed by McNaught Syndicate, Inc.)

The Bottleneck Answer

Washington, June 26. THE effort continues to convince the defense management—if it can be called that—that its plan to expand steel production by ten million tons will retard the defense program rather than accelerate it. Certainly, cogent arguments to sustain this view have been presented, but the decision still impends.

THE broad general declaration is made that no sound reason for this steel expansion exists; and that it belongs in the category of the Florida Ship Canal, Passamaquoddy and the St. Lawrence Seaway projects, all of which are of dubious merit and certainly should not be considered when men and materials are so urgently needed in the defense a truck at the Stover feed mill here, when Sprague flashed his badge and ordered him to move on.

Sprague's attorney pleaded that the defendant may have violated the trust and confidence placed in him by the Perkaskie Fire Company, but that he did not violate the Act of Assembly.

Justice Sprengel said he intended to inform the fire company officials of the proceedings and suggest that the company order Sprague to turn in his badge.

When members of New Hope Fish, Game & Forestry Protective Association met in New Hope town hall, this week, they were informed that 800 legal size trout had been placed in Ingham Run Creek on June 19th.

Members of the association, of which George H. Ely is the president, had planned to flush the dam at the mouth of Ingham Run creek, but it was announced that the dam project for the season had been discontinued. Water in the dam, it was stated, had backed up the creek, and this has caused the water to become too warm for the trout. Gates at the dam at the mouth of the creek were opened a short time one evening last week, and some of the water was drained from the creek. It is believed that as a result of this, the conditions will be improved.

Members of the game committee announced that a number of six-week-old pheasants had been ordered. It is believed the State Game Commission will fill the order in the near future, and the young pheasants will be raised in the pens at Point Pleasant.

The association was given two feed plots by Charlotte Dyer and Frederick Jussen, both of New Hope, R. D.

Forrest Lodge, V. F. W., Sellersville, soon will be ready to dedicate a large addition to its attractive home.

Work is progressing rapidly on the 30 by 40 stone addition, on the south side of the present structure located in a wooded section along the old Route 309.

Lewis Brothers, Quakertown builders, are in charge of operations. They have nearly finished part of the stone work. The entire project is expected to be finished by the end of August.

The addition will include a large dining room, kitchen and boiler room. The next public gathering at Forrest Lodge on July 13 will give friends of the post an opportunity to see progress of the work.

NEED OF AID TO FAR EAST HIGHLY STRESSED

Exchange Club Speaker, News
Correspondent, Points Out
Importance of Such

MAJOR TRADE ISSUE

Bristol Exchange Club met last evening in the Elks Home in the last regular meeting for the summer season. Nineteen members and one guest attended, and president Horace Schmidt presided.

The speaker of the evening, Robert A. Smith, of the New York Times, was introduced by Mr. Schmidt. Mr. Smith spoke on the current situation in the Far East, where he served ten years as a Times correspondent.

Mr. Smith explained that newspaper men and the reading public have the same common desire to get accurate information or facts. "This is especially difficult because of propaganda, and press controlled news bureaus in the warring countries. In sifting the many contradictory news items we should be guided by the following methods," he explained. "First, a good correspondent will tell you the source of his information, whether it is fact or rumor; and second the truest source of information is in those countries where there is a political opposition which has the freedom to express its views and voice its opposition. It is for this reason we can depend more on British news dispatches than others, which must be taken with a grain of salt."

Mr. Smith then turned to the main subject of his remarks, the Far East: "In this present world conflict and amid the 'All Aid to Britain Program,' we are overlooking one of the most vital and important issues of our economic life. Without doubt we should aid Britain with all possible means at our command, but this aid must not be confined to the British Isles. It must extend to the British Commonwealth of Nations. It is especially important that we do not allow any great change in the Far East, for there is issues of trade more important to us than those of South America.

"I do not consider this present war as starting in 1939 but back in 1931, with the Japanese occupation of Manchuria. Here was the first real break in commitments and world stability, which was followed by others such as Albania, Ethiopia, Finland, etc. The international balance once disturbed, the steps to war were open and we are at present in the resultant conflict.

"Why does the Far East mean so much to our economic life? Let me give you some very vital facts in regard to trade figures there. One of the

HOW YOU ARE TO REGISTER ON SECOND REGISTRATION DAY

A Selective Service registrant who spends part of his time in one place and part in another will have the right to decide for himself which place he wants recorded as his residence when he registers July 1st. The place he chooses will determine the local board that will always have jurisdiction over him. Dr. William Mather Lewis, Selective Service Director for Pennsylvania, said today.

On the first registration day, October 16, 1940, such registrants were somewhat confused and some of them thereafter wanted to change the address they had given for the place of their residence after registration day. In other instances, the addresses given were incomplete or ambiguous and the cards reached the wrong local boards.

Revised Selective Service Regulations, prepared for the July 1st registration, require each registrant to describe the place of his residence so that its location may be determined from its description. A registrant who lives on an R. F. D. route will be required to indicate the location of his residence, rather than his mailing address. Because of this fact and because some registrants may want to have their mail sent to an address

NO NEWSPAPER BOTTLENECK

Newspapers in the 82 largest cities of the United States carried 6 per cent more retail advertising during the first week in June than during the same week of 1940. In areas in which unusual defense activity is concentrated the gain was much greater.

The daily newspapers of the United States are in magnificent position to do a great job of liaison between distribution outlets and consumers in the present period of accelerated retail activity and current and anticipated merchandising problems. It is doubtful if advertising was ever more widely read or more indispensable to buyer and seller than in this year of 1941 in the United States.

The daily newspapers of the nation have anticipated events and are prepared to do their part. Not only have news coverage and editorial content been streamlined to meet the needs of a new day, but mechanical facilities have been improved to produce a neater and more pleasing product.

Circulation of the daily newspapers has never been higher than it is today and the result is that the average daily journal is rendering a greater service to all as the prime mover of foods from seller to consumer. Although costs of publishing a modern newspaper are increasing, so far there is no shortage of paper or other basic material. There is no newspaper bottleneck.

If there is any curtailment during the course of the present upheaval in the service the American newspapers render, it will not be at the volition of the men who make the newspapers. Such a decline can come only because of restrictions at the source of news or curtailment of the supplies of paper or the thousand other items that go into the making of a free press.

RUSSIA'S TURN

Can the Russia of Stalin inflict sufficient damage on the Hitler war machine to weaken it and start it on the downhill road? The world is anxiously waiting for the answer to this question.

The Russia of Czar Nicholas inflicted heavy casualties on the Germans and Austrians in the first days of the last war, but these temporary successes did not weaken the Kaiser's war machine, and Russia, out of the war for a year and a half, played no part in the Allied victory.

Whether history will repeat, or whether the Russia of today will be able to hold the German army at bay somewhere within its borders and thus prevent concentration of the full might of the Nazi scourge elsewhere, only unfolding events will reveal. This is the most anyone hopes for from Russia.

Defeat of Russia by Hitler, especially if accomplished in blitzkrieg manner, would leave the German war lord more powerful than ever. It would remove the menace of a Russian stab in the back from his rear, thus releasing Nazi cannon fodder for use elsewhere, and it would supply him with needed food and raw materials. The Allied hope now lies in a protracted war between the two totalitarian nations, or at least a stalemate after initial German successes.

The Allies are in no position to send effective help to Russia. The Russians are on their own, and unless they have been grossly under-rated, that will not be enough.

Average Attending Bible School is 135

lose this afternoon with a picnic at Tulmeville Park, participated in by the faculty and pupils.

The school opened on June 16th and, continued for two weeks, with sessions held each morning from nine to 11:30. One hundred and ninety-four persons were enrolled. The school was under direction of the Rev. Arthur D. Sargis, pastor of the church, assisted by a corps of 20 volunteer teachers recruited from churches of the neighborhood.

The theme of the school was "Learning of God," and the theme song, set to the music of "The Band Played On," runs as follows:

"For it is Bible School time in Eddington, To learn of God.

With all of our might we will do the right To learn of God.

There are classes for boys, there are classes for girls Learning of God.

The Golden Rule in our Bible School is To learn of God."

There were 194 enrolled in the school this year, with an average attendance of 135, or 69 per cent. Last year the enrollment was 273, the average attendance of 179 making 62 per cent.

A varied program of instruction was offered, emphasizing patriotism as symbolized by the American flag, and loyalty to Christ as symbolized by the Christian flag. Each morning talks were given by George C. Tibbets, a senior in Maryville College, Tenn., concerning outstanding events in the history of the Christian Church, followed by the salute to the Christian flag; and also incidents relating to the adoption or later history of the American flag, with a salute to that flag.

A period was devoted each day to the study of two of the great hymns of the Church, "Onward Christian Soldiers" and "America the Beautiful." For the daily study period the entire school was divided into classes. This year the subject of study was the catechism, two versions being used to meet the requirements of the various age groups. An opportunity was given, as part of the daily program, for members of the school to volunteer to entertain by vocal or instrumental music or some other form of talent; and also by some simple dramatic presentation to illustrate right or wrong conduct.

Bible stories had an important place in the program, and each morning, the Rev. Mr. Sargis told a Bible story, explaining one of the names of God. An impressive event each day was a worship service in the church auditorium, in which a somewhat abbreviated form of the standard service was used, including a sermon.

During the first week Miss Merian S. Peters, well-known writer and lecturer, brought a message on the Ark of Noah, and during the second week the messages were brought by the Rev. Mr. Sargis and Mr. Tibbets.

Yesterday morning the faculty and pupils presented the Rev. Mr. Sargis with a two volume work on the Psalms in appreciation of his untiring efforts in making the school a success, and in recognition of his long period of service in conducting vacation Bible Schools in Eddington. In the evening a model session of the school was conducted before an enthusiastic group of parents and friends.

Soviet Government Fails To Acknowledge Promised Aid

Washington, June 27 — Failure of the Soviet Government to show a more enthusiastic and grateful response to the American offer of aid to Russia in its war with Germany is causing considerable interest in Washington today.

Some surprise is expressed in official quarters over the fact that Soviet ambassador Oumansky, in his call on acting Secretary of State Welles, brought no response from Moscow to the American offer of aid and expressed no appreciation for it himself.

Oumansky merely notified the State Department of what he described as Germany's "predatory" attack on the Soviet Union and accepted for transmission to Moscow Welles' renewed expression of this government's willingness to give immediate attention and as favorable consideration as possible to any request for material assistance which the Soviet government might submit.

It is five days since Welles announced this government's decision to support Russia.

most important products that we are dependent upon the Far East for, is rubber. Our annual consumption is about 800,000 tons a year, of which the major portion comes from the Malay Peninsula. South America, even considering the new Ford plantations in Brazil can only supply 180,000 tons of this important product. Now what about synthetic rubber? First it does not have all the necessary qualities to make a perfect substitute; and second we would have to increase our production 600 times to meet our present consumption.

"Tin is another vital product which we must import. We are the largest consumer of tin in the world, taking half the world's output, and three-fourths of all our tin comes through the port of Singapore, the center for smelting of the ore. If we were to take all of the South American output from Bolivia it would only supply one-third of our total demands. And what is more important is that it will be necessary for us to do much of the smelting of the ore, which work has been disrupted in the Far East because of the war.

"Manila hemp is another product which we must have from the Far East. Sumatra alone supplies three-fourths of this material. Coconut oil, of vital importance in the making of soaps and many other products requiring a vegetable oil, comes from the Far East. There are many by-products of this industry that are also necessary.

"Tungsten from southern China, and chromium from the Philippines, are vital metals necessary for alloy steels. We import vast quantities of these ores. Careful consideration of these trade facts will show that the Far East supplies most of the necessary products that we cannot produce at home. We are dependent on others for them; and adding quinine to this list makes us realize that no army could fight in the tropics without danger of malaria, and the bulk of our imports of quinine come from this area.

"One of the real dangers to our industrial order then lies in the Pacific and the prospect of war there is not far distant. Japan is trying to get control of the vital products and will force Britain and the United States out of this area. The United States must keep this trade open and aid to China is absolutely necessary to keep Japan occupied. The Chinese army as long as it keeps up its resistance, prevents Japan from moving southward toward the Malay Peninsula and the East Indies. Our navy, operating from the Philippines, and using the greatest naval base in the world, the British port of Singapore can prevent any further breakup in the Far Eastern situation."

"We need more backbone and must not take the attitude that we are unprepared and cannot face a war at the present time. With Singapore as a naval base we can take care of Japan, to whom this area is especially necessary in order to supply even the necessities of war machine. The Open Door must be preserved as 'our Far Eastern Policy.'"

CHAPTER THIRTY

If Marie hadn't been so upset when she left the luncheon party, she would never have taken the fateful yellow car. But Luigi's approach was deft and respectful, as he detached himself from a group of chauffeurs chatting on the garden side of the Casino. He had the car there ready.

It wouldn't have taken much to change Marie's mind about the visit to La Lascar. She looked first toward the Serena. Practically everyone had left her yacht; everyone but Tony Worth. Why hadn't he turned up?

How could she know that, at this particular time, Tony had locked himself in Northem's suite, and was anxiously watching her through binoculars. How could she know that there was mutiny on the yacht?

As Marie stepped into the car, she told herself that, if Tony had been at the luncheon, she wouldn't have made that scene. But at least, in so vehemently denying any engagement to the Marchese Lippi, she had cleared the air. She would telephone the Posters, at Juan les Pins, that night; and ask them if she could spend a few days at their villa. That was it. Felix Northem and Lippi would then have no further excuse for staying on the Serena. Automatically, they would cease being her guests, because she would be someone else's guest.

Luigi veered off the main road, and up a short hill. The Baroness Lascar's Villa Rose stood at the end of the branching road. It was a small, square, one-story house, stuccoed in pink, with wide windows and flowering vines. Two first flanked a moss-grown path; the air was heavy with roses and mimosa.

Marie leaned forward. "Thank you, Luigi," she said, slipping a thousand-franc bill into the ready hand he lifted from the wheel. "I want you to wait for me." She went on, with some slight hesitation, "But, Luigi, please don't mention to anyone where I've been this afternoon. It's a private matter, you understand."

So swiftly did he turn the car and make off, that surprise lingered in Marie's expression as she walked up the path. The door opened on a pink sliver of hall, leading straight through to a garden door. The woman who let Marie in, said, hospitably, "Madame la Baroness is expecting you." She drew aside gray silk curtains, and Marie entered a charming sitting room, with a view on the road and the distant harbor. The furnishings were ash rose. As she was admiring a luminous water-color on the gray plastered walls, Madame Lascar's dusky voice sounded from behind.

"My dear child, how good of you to come!"

Marie took the cool, outstretched hand. "I wasn't sure I could make it," she said. They stood looking at each other. Marie thought, with instant sympathy: She's lovelier than I remembered, and she's terribly worried about something.

"You thought it perhaps strange that I have made such a mystery about this little visit?" Madame Lascar moved away from the light. Her delicate skin showed marks of sleepless nights.

Before Marie could answer, La Lascar added slowly, "I'm sorry Luigi brought you here. Does Felix Northem know—where you are?"

"Of course, he doesn't," Marie remained by the window. When Madame Lascar didn't speak, Marie continued in a puzzled tone. "I can't understand why Luigi didn't wait, though. I told him—"

She stopped as Madame Lascar swept back across the room. The arch of her lips was brilliant against her white face and tight-fitting black robe. "We will forget Luigi," she said with forced gaiety. "Anna will phone for a taxi when we are ready. Unfortunately, I do not have a car." She took one of Marie's hands in hers. "Do you know how lucky you are? So young and enchanting — rich — and in love!"

"I'm not in love!" Marie exclaimed. "At least, I'm not."

La Lascar let go of her hand. "But surely, you and the Marchese Lippi—"

Marie exclaimed, in honest disgust, "Have you got that idea, too? I'm getting terribly sick of hearing it." She walked away from the woman who was looking at her with such intense eyes.

But the Baroness Lascar followed her, and asked in voice so low that Marie had to swing around to catch the words, "Then it is Felix — yes? May I congratulate you?"

It was a quarter past two that afternoon when Felix Northem and the Marchese Lippi set off with frantic haste for Madame Lascar's villa, where Luigi had left Marie Schuyler. Eric Thelme saw them go. He had been hanging around the Croisette, unwilling to report to the man who supposedly owned him body and soul.

Eric was decidedly drunk, which was exactly what he wanted to be. Ever since he left the Schuyler yacht, he had been tormented by remorse. Looking across the harbor of Cannes at the beautiful white ship, which only appeared to rest peacefully in the June radiance, Thelme's inflamed mind conjured up pictures he would have given anything to forget... Tony Worth was a regular. A decent egg, who had been friendly. And what had he, Eric, done in return? Knocked him out; tied and gagged him, and left him in his cabin at the mercy of Fritz and that sinister Jap.

But Northem had said, Eric argued in his fuddled head, that it was only for a few hours; that it was a matter of getting certain papers off the Serena without interference.

Any child could soon be free of the knots Eric had tied so loosely. So what was he worrying about? Eric didn't know. He had gone straight from the yacht to an out-of-the-way buvette, and ordered double whiskeys, suddenly recalling his past which Northem held over him like a whip. You couldn't put a big fellow like himself in jail for a braggart career with a few slips such as checks and cards and a choice of fine names. But you could. The purple veins in Eric's cheeks swelled. He managed his huge body carefully, as he left the haven of the buvette.

Not only did Eric see Northem and Lippi drive away, with Luigi at the wheel, but he noticed Friedrich Haensel and Sergei Vorodkin walking along toward the Carlton Hotel. Eric wondered who they were. He watched them stop and look toward the Serena.

Haensel, stocky and curt, was saying, "We'll give him until tomorrow."

Vorodkin nodded. "If it weren't for certain things—great changes to come—I would have nothing to do with these — capitalists!" he spat. "And I would have nothing to do with you, either, Herr Haensel."

The German squared his shoulders. "Ja, Communist and Nazi shall always hate each other," he agreed. "But Northem's agency and his clearing house may be very convenient to us both... to our governments, I'm sure. Our police will watch him, never fear."

"And ours," Vorodkin gave a last angry look at the yacht. "You make wars. We take advantage of them. The world situation is giving us what we want, and the world doesn't know it yet."

After a brief pause, the Russian remarked, "Our main danger is a prosperous, God-inspired America. Your danger is any and all nations in favor of democracies. We both want—"

"A truce" — Haensel said, frowning... between the Reich and Soviet governments."

Suddenly, a shot cracked over the waters, seeming to come from the Serena. It was too remote to be followed up by any visible agitation on shore. Yet it smacked upon Eric Thelme's consciousness, and promptly he hired a boatman, directing that he be taken to the yacht. If anyone had hurt Tony Worth—

Haensel and Vorodkin also heard the shot. They looked at each other, and shrugged. Violence was not unknown to them in the pursuit of their purposes. But, of course, if there were any disturbance in Felix Northem's vicinity, they would simply take the Train Bleu back to Paris.

Trouble stirred the Serena long before that shot. For mutiny gripped that American luxury ship in the harbor. Captain Buckner, standing at a knot at his throw in the small lobby outside Northem's suite, had warned Tony Worth of that. "Don't open!" he had cried courageously ment credit has long been recognized as a contributory factor to inflation. OPM officials, as a result, are studying possible legislative means to curb such credit buying. It is probably the most complex of all problems facing defense officials.

Before the legislation is enacted, however, the public probably will first feel the results of price controls.

Controls, in some form or another, already have been imposed on automobiles; rubber (automobile tires and tubes); furniture; bread; steel and iron and steel products; farm machinery; aluminum scrap; zinc scrap; combed cotton yarns; nickel scrap; and hides (shoes). Officials also are watching commodity markets handling such foodstuffs as coffee, tea, cocoa, sugar and spices.

These price controls, according to the OPM, are necessary because of the increased amount of money in circulation due to booming employment in defense industries. The more money in circulation, the brisker the bidding under the old law of supply and demand.

mand, OPM officials say. If Americans have to do without $2,000,000,000 worth of goods and services this year and $8,000,000,000 next year the bidding would be so brisk that there would be runaway prices unless price controls are set up, they conclude.

Faith Clarke's SHOPPING TIPS FOR BUDGETEERS

Last minute wedding gifts fun for the Fourth, fine sheets at a fine saving, good fash at good prices, news about a place to park that car.

Why not set up a Badminton set for the Fourth? Requires little space, no prepared court! Contributes happiness and health to any family. Snellenburg's "Sporting Goods Dept." has good sets at amazingly reduced prices, one at $3.88 because partly made in India! Complete with four racquets, stakes, nets, birds, etc. More expensive sets reduced from $7.50 to $4.95; from $10 to $5.95. But do give the $3.88 sets the once-over. Sets can be written or phoned for, if you'd rather. Good buy.

For selection of an inexpensive yet delightful wedding gift, do see Snellenburg's display of Imperial's "Candlewick" glass. The clear shapes — bowls, pitchers, party platters, candlesticks, etc. (so very many kinds of pieces), are edged with "beads" of crystal, after an old, traditional pattern. The prices of this handmade glass range from a mere 50c to about $3. All pieces look at least twice their price, from a fruit and flower bowl at 75c, to a grandmotherly, pedestal cake plate at $3. (China and Glass Dept.)

Venetian blinds are the smartest window accessories. The question is mainly what kind and where to buy. I have the answers for you — "Prisillas" at Snellenburgs. Prisillas last. These particular blinds are made of light basswood, difficult to warp. Slats are 1½ ins., pull cords are standard, tapes sturdy, blinds washable. Ivory and white in stock, colors $9c a sq. ft. 15-22" wide, 54" long, $2.95. 23-27" wide, 64" long, $3.95. 28-36" wide, 64" long, $4.95. 37-42" wide, 64" long, $4.95. One of your own for summer?

Good electric fans at emphatic reductions! Later ones may be up in price rather than down. Snellenburg's "Housewares Dept." (3rd fl.) has Polar Cub 8" fans for $2.98 instead of $3.69; Westinghouse 10" fans, oscillating, $7.95 instead of $9.95; and Genl. Elec. 12" $21 fans for only $12.95. Now is the time to buy if ever! A fan in home or office lessens fatigue, eases dispositions. Moving air, though hot and not always fresh, is less exhausting than still air. Open windows top and bottom and slant fan up—whe! Swell!

P. S. Summer shopping is pleasant if you start early. Here's to more than your money's worth in a shop of exceptional values! Say I sent you!—P. C.

ON THE SCREENS

BRISTOL THEATRE

Roy Rogers, starred by Republic in "In Old Cheyenne," which opens today at the Bristol Theatre, got his professional start with the "Sons of the Pioneers" dance band. The group composed a number of popular cowboy ditties including "Drifting Along With the Tumbling Tumbleweeds" and "Way Out There."

GRAND THEATRE

Wallace Beery, a Pancho Lopez, whimsical bandit, romps through high adventure, thrills, intense drama, and comedy in his most picturesque character since he enacted Pancho Villa, in "The Bad Man," now playing at the Grand Theatre.

Porter Emerson Browne's famous stage play takes on new scope enacted in the picturesque cattle country about Gallup, N. M.

The story deals with a group of "tenderfeet" on a cattle ranch, their lives complicated by a love affair and by a fight between a banker and oil swindler seeking to take the property for oil development. Into this rides Beery as Pancho Lopez. The leading man is his friend.

Spencer Tracy and Mickey Rooney are together again, as co-stars of "Men of Boys Town," sequel to "Boys Town," with Tracy again playing Father Flanagan and Rooney "Whitey." The picture will be shown today at the Ritz Theatre.

Norman Taurog, who directed them in both films, says of the two stars: "It is always a treat to work with Spencer and Mickey. Most of their scenes are made in a single take. Mickey or Mickey to take one from Spencer. I have seen them more often than not try to throw a scene to the other. That's the only time when I had to step in and call a halt."

Hurler Gets Himself Out of A Tough Spot in The Last Frame

Extra base hits plus effective pitching in the clutch gave the Odd Fellows a 6-4 victory over the Auto Boys last evening on Leedom's field. It was the first defeat of the second half for the Auto Boys.

The Odd Fellows had eleven hits in the tilt and seven of these were for extra bases including six doubles and a triple. Sid Purcell and Bisphan both had a pair of doubles.

The tight pitching was done by Turner Ashby who gave up seven hits to the Mill Streeters. Ashby did his best work in the final session. After Kratz was hit with a pitched ball, Cahall doubled to left to score him. Klein hit safely and Heftman walked to load the bases with no one gone.

Ashby was in tough spot with the tying and winning runs on base. But he breezed the third strike past Dougherty and then forced H. Barroth to top a short fly beyond second base which Clifton gobbled. McCue who had hit for singles in the first and sixth was the next batter and Ashby promptly struck him out to end the tilt.

FIVE-RUN FLARE-UP WINS FOR VOLTZ-TEXACO

A five-run flare-up in the fifth and a two-run rally in the seventh gave the Voltz-Texaco nine a close 7-6 victory over St. Ann's last evening on the Saints' field. At one stage of the game, St. Ann's held a 5-0 lead.

A triple by Mazzillo, a double by Shackleton, and a single by Thrig gave the gasoliers the pair of runs that were necessary for the victory. St. Ann's made a gallant attempt to either deadlock or win the game in their last turn with the stick but with two base-runners on the sacks, Nick Palumbo fanned for the third out.

Until he went to pieces in the fifth, Cervello had pitched wonderful ball. He did not allow a safe blow in the first four cantos and had set down eight batters via the strikeout route. But the damage was done on four hits a pass and an error by Angelini.

Shackleton did good work on the mound despite the seven errors his mates committed behind him. He also had eleven strikeouts and gave up four hits, two going to DeRisi.

tomobile production is practically the answer to all bottlenecks—steel, aluminum, magnesium, copper, rubber, nickel, zinc, lead, transportation and labor. The ramifications of this industry are so great that proper restrictive measures could solve transportation problems without great increase in equipment, particularly if, in addition to this, the petroleum, steel and other industries co-operate by cutting out cross hauls during time of stress.

FOR example, Mr. Replogle, who was director of steel supplies in the 1918 War Industries Board and now advocates a reduction of fifty per cent. in automobile production, points out that Bethlehem Steel is shipping millions of tons of steel to Chicago and other Western points which logically should be supplied by steel manufacturers in those districts—such as Inland, Illinois Steel,

TOUCHING ALL BASES... With JACK GILL

Sharp fouls that whizz past the coaching box: Johnny Slaven, who has been assisting George Reimer at Bensalem with sports, will be in the Army by the time next Fall rolls around. This sweeps Bensalem of both coaches. Reimer is currently engaged in directing a Rotary camp. Slaven is well known in Bristol and for two years set the Bristol Basketball League crazy with a hook shot that hit its mark often.

Tom O'Connor, Yardley pro, spun off some nice rounds during the forepart of the Open last month, but faltered badly at the finish. . . . At any rate, his name gave this part of the country a satisfied chest movement. . . . Coach Tom Campion handed out many a new ball to his boys at the season's finish. . . . Looks like the pitchers master the batters in the Twilight League. . . . Sweeney rates with some of the best in Philly, according to word we have received from a couple of Philadelphia League fans who watched him toil. . . . The Washington Senators collide with their farm club, Trenton, at Dunn Field, next Monday evening. . . . Remember Kenny Hill, of Doolington, who played in the Delaware River League? . . . He's playing third base for Toronto, in the International loop. . . .

The Bristol Odd Fellows certainly aren't an odd presentation to the older fans as they trot out upon the field. Ike Watson, Buddy Bilger, Sid Purcell, Leo Hibbs and Henry Morrell still give the young snipes a run around. Now all they need is Blackie, Bing Comly and Dutch Afterbach. Blackie, by the way, is having trouble winning in the Trenton Industrial League.

At least a score of track fans have signified their intentions of being on the scene of action, Sunday, at the senior Nationals at Franklin Field. Our guess is as good as yours as to what will happen when five men who have done the century in 9.5 this season toe the mark in the 100 meters. The meet will be the greatest track and field eye-opener ever held in this part of the woods. The East, always behind the West in the jumps, will get a look at steeplechase who does 6 feet, 11 inches in the high jump, and Cornelius Warmerdam, who nearly hits 15 feet in the pole vault. These leaps were once considered as incredible performances. The guys will probably take off and start flying in Philly. One thing is certain, the competitors didn't come to town to see Independence Hall. Better get in on it.

The recent list of college grads brings back recollections. Harry Barouth, of Colgate, was once a smart Bunny quarterback and adroit placement booter. Sam Schiffer was one of Doc's better men. Kalenski starred here at baseball. Both Schiffer and Kalenski graduated from Daugherty's old alma mater, Springfield, known nationally as the best physical ed school in the country. Langhorne's Herm Hermanson graduated from Southern California, where he was a distance man of note.

Modern Plymouth Rock story: We horned in on a recent chin session with Steve Juenger, former Bristol mentor, and Tom Campion, present director. They were talking of the stones that fill Bristol's playing field. "I used to have about 300 boys come out for health class each week," remarked Steve. "I made each boy pick up five stones and throw them off the field. Imagine our surprise when they got bigger and more in number the farther down we got. So we had to quit."

etc. And these companies are shipping steel to Eastern cities which should be supplied by Bethlehem and Eastern producers. If necessary, arrangements could be made whereby the manufacturer nearest the consumer could furnish the steel for the account of his competitor, so that they could bill their customer as usual. In a similar way, Standard Oil, Atlantic Refining and other Eastern oil refineries are shipping gasoline in tanks and cars to Western and Southwestern points, which should be supplied by the Southwestern refineries, which are now shipping millions of gallons into the Eastern districts.

THE waste involved in this sort of business is really shocking. It, of course, adds vastly to the cost of the defense program. But, it wastes not only money but time and labor, which are of infinitely greater value. In the last war, this waste was largely eliminated because there were co-ordination, direction, ability and authority at the top. And there was then an exceedingly competent head to the industrial mobilization in the person of Mr. B. M. Baruch. Now, there is no head, no authority, little ability and not much sense of direction. The result is that no profit at all is being derived from the experiences of the last war.

IN fact, until two days ago, when thirty industry committees were set up under commodity sections of the OPM, it seemed that the effort was to disregard that experience altogether. These industry committees are directly modeled on those of the old War Industries Board and have been urged by Mr. Baruch for many weeks. They will simplify and facilitate the priorities business which has been in a horrible muddle, but they are not the real answer to the waste and confusion in which the whole effort is steeped. There will be no diminution in that until responsibility and power are centered in one competent man, who is generally recognized as the boss. That's what the organization really needs and nearly everybody admits it—except the President.

IT is a heartbreaking state of affairs for those experienced observers who from the outside realize what is going on inside. And it is pretty tough for the able men within the defense organization who know what ought to be done but lack the power to do it. Nothing really can be done at all to straighten out and speed up until and unless Mr. Roosevelt makes it possible. Last week, there seemed an excellent chance that a reorganization along sound lines at last was going to be authorized and directed. There was reason to expect an immediate announcement. But, once again something happened to sidetrack it. No one ever knows what really does happen to these plans in which the President acquiesces. All that is known is that they do not come through.

HULMEVILLE

Work has been started on the addition to the Vornhold wallpaper mill, here. The addition will provide a new office, and additional storage space. The two-story addition which will afford more than 2,000 additional feet of floor space, is to be of brick. It will be erected at the front of the present structure, extending the full width of the building. It is expected that work will be completed in approximately four weeks.

Miss Ethel Wheeler has been paying a visit to Mrs. Thomas Jones, Philadelphia.

Residents are reminded of the bake-sale which the Hulmeville Boy Scout troop will conduct in Ettinger's store, tomorrow.
